INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS AND TRADE LAW

LLM

KPT/JPS (N/380/7/0012) 02/17

This programme will equip graduates with an advanced and profound understanding of the impact of international law and institutions like the World Trade Organisation (WTO), as well as the legal rules regulating business activities globally. By completing this programme, graduates should be fully ready and able to meet the challenges faced by current and aspiring middle to senior managers and legal practitioners.

WHO SHOULD APPLY?

- Lawyers in private or in-house practice
- Business owners looking to better understand the legal workings of international businesses, commercial transactions and trade law
- Fresh graduates who want to equip themselves with in-depth knowledge and expertise in international business and trade law matters to secure competitive jobs in these fields.

To receive the LLM in this area of specialisation, student must complete the following modules.

WHAT IS AN LLM?

The Master of Laws (LLM - an abbreviation of its Latin name, Legum Magister) is an internationally recognised postgraduate law degree. Law students and other professionals who pursue the LLM will gain expertise in a specialised field of law, such as international business and trade, healthcare and medical, intellectual property, international banking and finance, and cyberlaw. Many law firms prefer job candidates with an LLM degree because it indicates that they have acquired advanced, specialised knowledge, and are qualified and equipped to work in a multinational legal environment.

An LLM degree by itself generally does not qualify graduates to practise law. In most cases, LLM graduates must first obtain an undergraduate degree in law, such as the Bachelor of Laws (LLB) and complete the professional Bar examination.

WHAT WILL YOU GAIN FROM LLM?

- Knowledge and understanding that can be applied to a range of legal contexts and complexities to provide relevant and appropriate legal analysis.
- The ability to identify and select appropriate printed and electronic legal information sources to facilitate legal analysis.
- Skills to identify, critically evaluate and analyse legal issues raised by complex and novel problem situations, and apply relevant legal principles to produce logical, appropriate and creative solutions.
